About Adichunchanagiri Institute for Molecular Medicine
The Adichunchanagiri Institute for Molecular Medicine (AIMM), established in 2016, has evolved from an initial focus on basic dietary antioxidants into a sophisticated translational research center dedicated to advanced biomedical research and drug discovery. Over the years, AIMM has produced more than 70 scientific publications and secured over 8 patents, reflecting its strong research impact. Early work included the development of the Anishrin peptide (US Patent 8,389,677B2), while recent research (2024-2026) focuses on cutting-edge areas such as nano-oncology and diagnostics, including the development of next-generation photodynamic therapeutic agents using MOF and LDH complexes activated by infrared light for precision cancer therapy in collaboration with Jain University. The institute is also engaged in small molecule synthesis, particularly benzimidazole and heterocyclic compounds targeting DNA repair pathways to inhibit cancer metastasis, as well as glycolytic and clinical diagnostics using MALDI-TOF-MS to identify biomarkers for lung and cervical cancers in collaboration with Hokkaido University. Additionally, AIMM conducts research on antimicrobial resistance (AMR) by screening natural and synthetic molecule libraries against drug-resistant pathogens such as MRSA. The institute maintains strong national and international collaborations through MoUs with institutions including St. Jude Children's Research Hospital (USA), Hokkaido University (Japan), CSIR-ICR (India), Liveon Biotech, Star Herbs, RV College of Engineering, and Prakruthi Products Pvt.
